Scoresheet Return

Scoresheet return remains the same as last season. There will be a pre-addressed envelope in each packet for returning the scoresheets. The scoresheet must have a postmark of no later than Wed. or penalty points will be assessed. A Thurs.postmark is 5 pts., Fri. 8 pts., any other is all points. Anyone with access to a fax machine can fax it to me at 493-8091. Make sure that you have a number that you can be reached in case it is un-readable. You can also hand deliver them directly to me, as long as I have the scoresheet by Friday.

Vole answer from the 1/19 match.* What is a vole? Although there are many voles occupying various environments around the globe, all are rodents a bit larger than mice. Here is a description of the prairie vole, found in the Canadian plains: The Prairie Vole is almost 14 CM with a 3 CM tail. It is brown or black in color. Prairie voles inhabit the tall-grass prairies(Duh!) in underground colonies for protection. They eat green plants, seeds, bulbs, and bark, which is stored for winter. Females produced several litters of 2 to 6 babies. They are prey to many creatures and only live an average of one year in the wild. The northern plains tribes of manitoba reportedly used them as side dishes. - From the Inventory of Mammals of Manuskewin. Other voles include the narrow-skulled vole, Duke of Bedford's vole, and the Bavarian Pine Vole.

Hall of Shame

The Match write-up shows Studs & Bitches with their win of 12/7. However, due to the scoresheet not being turned in until Saturday, the score in the standings shows the penalty of 12 points. A reprint of the rules regarding the score sheet is included in this newsletter.

An Open Letter to the BCDL

I have been playing in the Bull City Dart League for several years. Let me first say that I enjoy our league more than the only other league I participated in - ours is friendlier, faster, and allows more opportunity to play each night. However, I have become dissatisfied with the league's structure to the point that I may no longer participate.

Our team is one of the better B-division squads. Our B-division matches are always competitive. Most nights the match comes down to 701 (not that this matters, as the league doesn't use match wins and losses in the standings). However, this season we have again been placed in the A division. The first season we "competed" in A, we lost every match and considered it a good showing if we scored 5 points (we later found out that our team had been bumped up because of a math error in calculating team handicaps.) The second season in A, we lost all 10 matches to the legitimate A teams, but used our competition with the other B teams that had also been bumped as incentive to get through the season (I believe we won our mini-division with a 3-1 record). This season marks our latest venture into the top echelon. We are in A for two reasons: 1- the league needed another team to move up to even the schedule; and 2- being out of town for the holidays during the scheduling session, we were unable to argue against being bumped. Neither of those reasons is valid for placing a team into a division (or A division). We will struggle to be competitive, and the players on our team will be less likely to attend matches when potential conflicts arise, as the outcome is predetermined, and the competition is not as much fun. My only other experience with competition that was based on skill level was extensive - 15 years as a volleyball player. In that sport, both the team indoor season (which runs most of a year) and the outdoor tournaments (that run for one or two days) offer a number of different levels. For the most part, teams choose which level to play. I can tell you that a tournament that assigned teams to divisions to ease their schedule wouldn't be around for long. The top level never had as many teams entered as the lower levels. If you were in the top division, you saw the same teams week after week because, quite simply, there are fewer players at that level. There were incentives for playing in the higher divisions, but aside from the occasional sandbagger (someone who chooses a lower level so that they win easily), players honestly and accurately picked their appropriate level, attempting higher levels if their skills improved. I believe the BCDL's moving teams into a higher level than they would choose to play on their own - especially without consulting them is wrong. It will lead to those teams dropping out. The schedule should not be a higher priority than the enjoyment of the league's members. It is unrealistic to assume that there would be an equal number of A, B, and C teams. A more normal distribution of the talent on 18 teams would see 4 each in the A and C groups, and 10 in B. Or possibly, 5-8-5. If the Council has to think harder when working out the schedule, so be it. I've had the misfortune of working on scheduling tournaments with very strange numbers. It's not easy, but it can be done. And it's expected of you by the participants - or as I said, they won't come back.

There are several ways that would be preferable to the current format. The best, in my opinion, would be to allow teams to choose their level. I would have no problem weighting the awards to provide incentive for the best players to compete in the highest division. Another alternative could be to split the league into equal divisions, regardless of ability. (I have often discussed with other league members why a handicap league is divided into A,B, and C.) The number of teams could be worked to play a reasonable number of season matches, and playoffs could be divided by finish (a championship, B, and C tournament). Original divisions would be seeded, to prevent the 3 or 4 best teams from ending up in the same one. The balanced divisions has been tried before, but not the split out for tournaments.

Regardless of the change, something needs to be done. Getting beat 15-3 each week isn't much fun. And fun is the reason that most of us show up each Tuesday to play. I don't believe the Council keeps the importance of that fact in mind. I must say that I will be surprised if the current format is changed. And you will count me in the growing number of League members that is designated as "former."

Sincerely,
Kevin Kirk
